

A part of the Paris Law Faculty, The Paris Doctoral Law Faculty (EDDS) brings together students embarking on a doctorate in law at University Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne. Students at the faculty receive supervision from research professors accredited to conduct research for this University as well as other associated institutions.

The result of a merger between the Doctoral Schools of Private Law, Public and Tax Law, Comparative Law, and International and European Law, the EDDS is both a specialized Doctoral School dedicated to the legal sciences, and a truly open institution, boasting a remarkable history and outstanding skills in all areas of law. The Faculty is proud of its rich heritage. Its areas of excellence are to be found in its various departments, sacrificing neither the unity and coherence of legal education at a doctoral level, nor the specificity of each individual field.

A part of the College of Doctoral Schools at the University Paris 1 Panthéon-Sorbonne, the EDDS enjoys the influence shared by all of its doctoral schools, and from its exceptional international perspective.

In terms of postgraduate doctoral studies, the EDDS offers an ideal framework for preparing a PhD in Law in the best possible conditions, helping doctoral students accomplish their academic or practical, personal and professional project.

The Paris Doctoral Law Faculty's high academic standards and formidable alumni network, the dynamism and recognition its associated research centres, as well as the energy and dedication of the wider Paris Law Faculty are what make it a major player in doctoral studies in law.
