Public Law PhD Student

Assistant Teacher

Thesis: The Concept of Public Economic Power

Fields of research: Public Economic Law, Theory of Law

ABOUT ME: On a theoretical level, I am interested in the interaction between different systems of thought, the production of norms within them and, a fortiori, their transposition into law. To draw on some of my own research, this can mean examining quantification and the relationship that law maintains with numbers in the context of public action. On a practical level, I conduct this research mainly through the study of one particular example: the interaction between law and economics. From this perspective, I have specialized in public economic law, and I am writing my thesis on Public Economic Power as a general theory of the faculty to direct the economy.
